

Sardines

About: Sardines is a version of hide and seek with some changes. The game of hide and seek originated in Greece in the 2nd century and is described by a Greek scholar named Julius Pollux. The rules of Sardines are different, and it gets its name because by the end of the game, all but one player will be hiding in the same hiding spot!

Number of people: 3 or more

Instructions:

Similar to hide and seek, Sardines is a game that involves some players hiding and others seeking them out. However, the rules to sardines is a little bit different.

1. One player will hide while the others wait.
2. After a minute or two, the seekers separate in attempt to find the hider.
3. Once a seeker finds the hider, the seeker must silently join the hider in his/her hiding spot.
4. The last seeker to find the group must be the next one to hide in the next game.
